Dear Mr. Johnson:

My intentions were to have written to you much sooner than this. However, like most college students, when school was in session I was very busy and when it wasn't I took advantage of the needed vacation. Even though much time has elapsed since the time I heard from you, I still feel very obligated to thank you once again for your help. It was your help, along with a few others, and a little hard work that provided fantastic results. Mr. Johnson, you and a couple of other people were the only ones to take time out of probably very busy schedules to help me. I can't strike from my mind all those letters I wrote and the very few replies I got, just as I can't forget the names of those who did help.

I received fantastic results in my project. I received an "A" on the project because of those results plus I received an "A" for the course. The most important thing though is that I learned very much about this past election as well as about some of the good people that I have indirectly met because of this project. Thank you very much. What a better place this would be if there were more people like you who are willing to share their ideas as well as their knowledge and who are willing to give a helping hand when needed.

Sincerely yours,

William Siebers Jr.
