Dear Mr. Johnson

I saw you and your family on T.V. the other evening. You can get my vote for being the average American family. It could ~~could~~ be noted that you are sincere, honest and that you have a real interest in the function of our government.

May I make a suggestion for your consideration. When making your choice for president remember this: A Republican will function as a Republican and the Democrat in the same way. It sound somewhat simple to make this statement but stop to consider this: Look back on your own experience of having lived under both kinds of administrations. Make your choice on what you have had in the past. By voting on the basis of your past experience you can assure yourself the kind of future you will have.

Don't take personalities into consideration or the statements candidates make. What they say is designed mostly to stimulate you to vote in this direction.

Example When stopping to consider the performance of a company under a given leadership, you don't go by what the administrator say about himself or his company; you go by the past performance. You check the facts and figures from the financial statements of the past (and present).

You can only hope to project the future by judging the past. It is the closest thing we have to a crystal ball.

Vote for the candidate of your choice on the basis of what other presidents of his party have done in the past.

Good Luck
